Love Unlimited #48

QUEENPOOL

Part 6

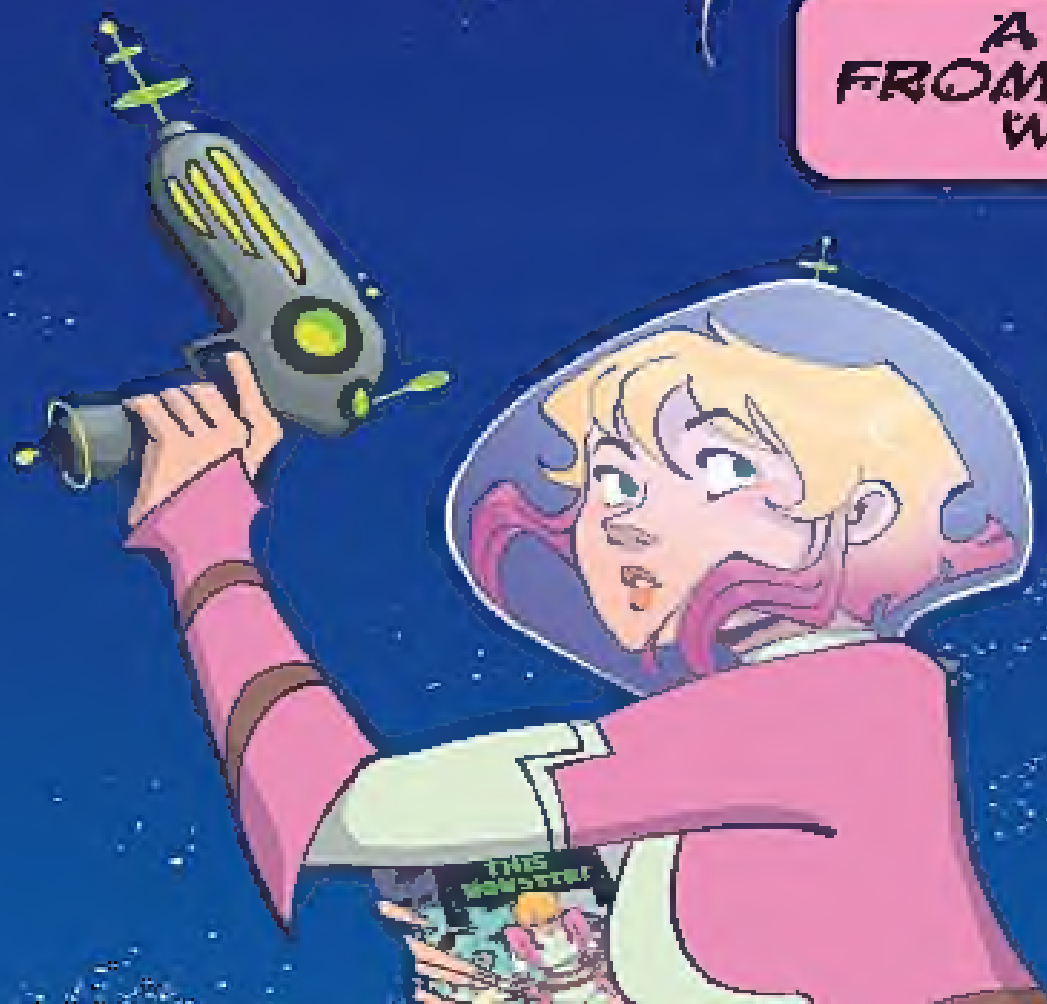

Consider,
if you will,
this girl.

She may appear to be a perfectly normal girl, but

perfectly normal girl, but beneath that exterior is something very wrong.

A THING
FROM ANOTHER WORLD.

She comes from a world both like and unlike your own.

Where the events of our world are mere fiction, written and drawn for the enjoyment of children.

But she ran away from her world
because she knew
she didn't belong.

But does she belong here?
Find out in...

"THIS GIRL...
THIS MONSTER!"

No,
stop that,
Gwen!

You're not a monster! You're just a person with her own complex
inner life.

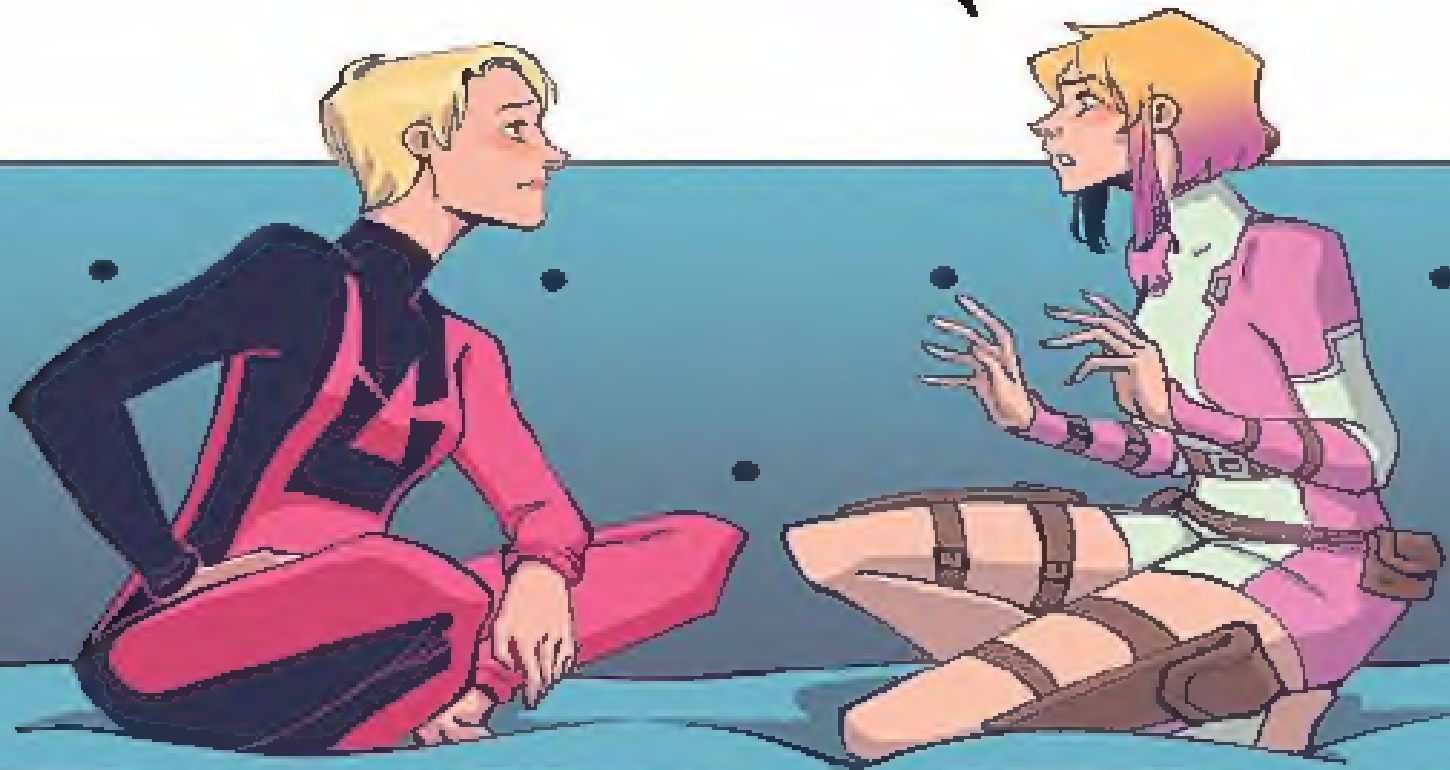

YOINK

"THIS GIRL...
THIS MONSTER!"

Okay, sorry, you're gonna have to help me with this.

You said
you thought I was asexual.
I know I didn't graduate high school, but isn't that...?

The paramecium is a unicellular ciliated protozoon.

It is a single-celled organism with no gender.

It reproduces ASEXUALLY.

Through binary fission, it splits, making ~~two perfect~~ copies of itself.

Nope, nope,
nope, that's asexual
reproduction.

But
take it from a bisexual...

...who you're attracted to, what you want from a relationship and what turns you on don't have to have anything to do with reproduction.

I know
when I'm in over my head.
You're coming with me!

But
wait, that's my emotional support
protozoon!

This is the ESU Pride Club. And this is our elected Ace Rep, Ronnie.

Hey, Julie! Who's
this?

Ronnie,
Gwen is brand

new to the idea of asexuality. Like,
"isn't that what protozoa do"
new.

On dear--
stand aside!

I can help!

Let's start with the basics, Gwen.

Being
asexual means you don't feel sexual attraction--or the same drive or need for sex-- that allosexual
people do.

Allosexual?

You know, people who seem to let their hormones determine who they spend their lives
with?

Oh
my gosh,
yes!

That
sounds made up, right? Like science fiction!

I know

exactly what you mean.

It's not that we don't find people attractive or know when people are hot, 't's just that that aesthetic value isn't necessarily connected directly to sexual desire.

Or in some cases, we don't feel sexual desire
at all.

Okay, so,
that absolutely sounds like me.

But what do I do now? Become a nun? Shut myself
off from society?
Die alone?

You only have to do any of those if you want to.

I, for one,
am demisexual. That means I only feel a sexual attraction to someone when we already share a deep emotional connection.

wait, there's a spectrum?

I'm a comic-book
nerd, so I, like, love minutia and power rankings
and--

Whoa, whoa, whoa, it's not about power ranking, and you don't have to try to be the "best type" of asexual.

You saw where I was going with that,
huh?

The spectrum is more about where you fall in terms of romantic desire and sexual attraction, which a lot of people don't realize are two separate things.

You can still be homo-, hetero- or biromantic.

Or you can be aromantic, which means you don't like the romance stuff at all.

A person's legs, wearing high-heeled shoes with ankle straps, are standing on a large, vibrant rainbow that curves across the top of the frame. The background is a soft, hazy sky.

You can even be gray asexual or grayromantic, which means you feel like you're somewhere between allosexual and asexual.

A person's head and shoulders are visible inside a pink speech bubble at the bottom of the page. The person has dark hair and is wearing a yellow top. The background of the page is a soft, hazy sky.

Okay, I definitely think I fall in here somewhere.

Like, I've spent years kinda... going along with what other people want, but I *know I don't feel the same desire for sexy times other people do.

I mean, no offense. If I was going to, it would absolutely be for you, Julie.

you, June.

You're a smoke show. A snack. I am absolutely one of those fans who drew doodles of you with too many abs when you were in *Avengers
Academy*.

Thanks.
No offense taken.

Even with me, I never really knew what to do with all of this. Like, how am I even supposed to be sexy?

The only thing I knew for sure is that I like my legs. That's why whenever they try to give me a full-length costume, I cut the legs off. Like, that's part of me I feel like I got right.

A comic book panel featuring two characters. On the left, a blonde woman with short hair is shown in profile, wearing a pink long-sleeved shirt and a black choker. She is looking towards the right. On the right, a woman with short blonde hair, wearing a pink jumpsuit with a black corset-like top and white boots, stands with her arms crossed. A speech bubble from the woman on the right says, "Oh, you're not wrong about that. You have dynamite gams." A second speech bubble from the blonde woman on the left says, "Thank you, bi-icon Julie Power." The background consists of a large window with vertical panes.

Oh,
you're not wrong about that. You have dynamite gams.

Thank you,
bi-icon Julie
Power.

I hope someone adds
"dynamite gams" to my list of powers in my wiki entry.

I guess being gifted with the legs of a young Carol Danvers doesn't mean I have to wrap
'em around
somebody.

I don't think I want romance, but is there a thing where two people count on each other and watch horror movies together and
and and...

...they will
snuggle me and tell me things are going to be okay when I'm awake until four in the morning thinking about the heat death of the universe?

I think what you're talking about
is a queerplatonic partnership.

Listen,

ace people kinda
have to make our own rules because the old ones don't work
for us.

Some ace people like physical affection, some don't. Some enjoy sex, even if they don't need it the same way. Some are just happy to have close friends.

The key is to be honest with yourself and the people in your life about what you want and need.

Erg, can you give me just a second?

Julie Power, you beautiful, kind, understanding, devastatingly tall, perfect bisexual rainbow...

...can
I have a--?

Mmph!

Of
course you
can!

How do I even begin to thank one of the most important
characters in my life for everything she's given me over the years?

How do I thank one of the most important
women in my life for helping me figure out who I am?

Julie, you're one of the most amazing people I've ever met. It's like...you and Batroc.

But I think I'm asexual and aromantic, and I know you need something I

you need something I can't give you.

Thanks
for telling me.

I release
you. Go find your people.

Thank you!
And I'm rooting

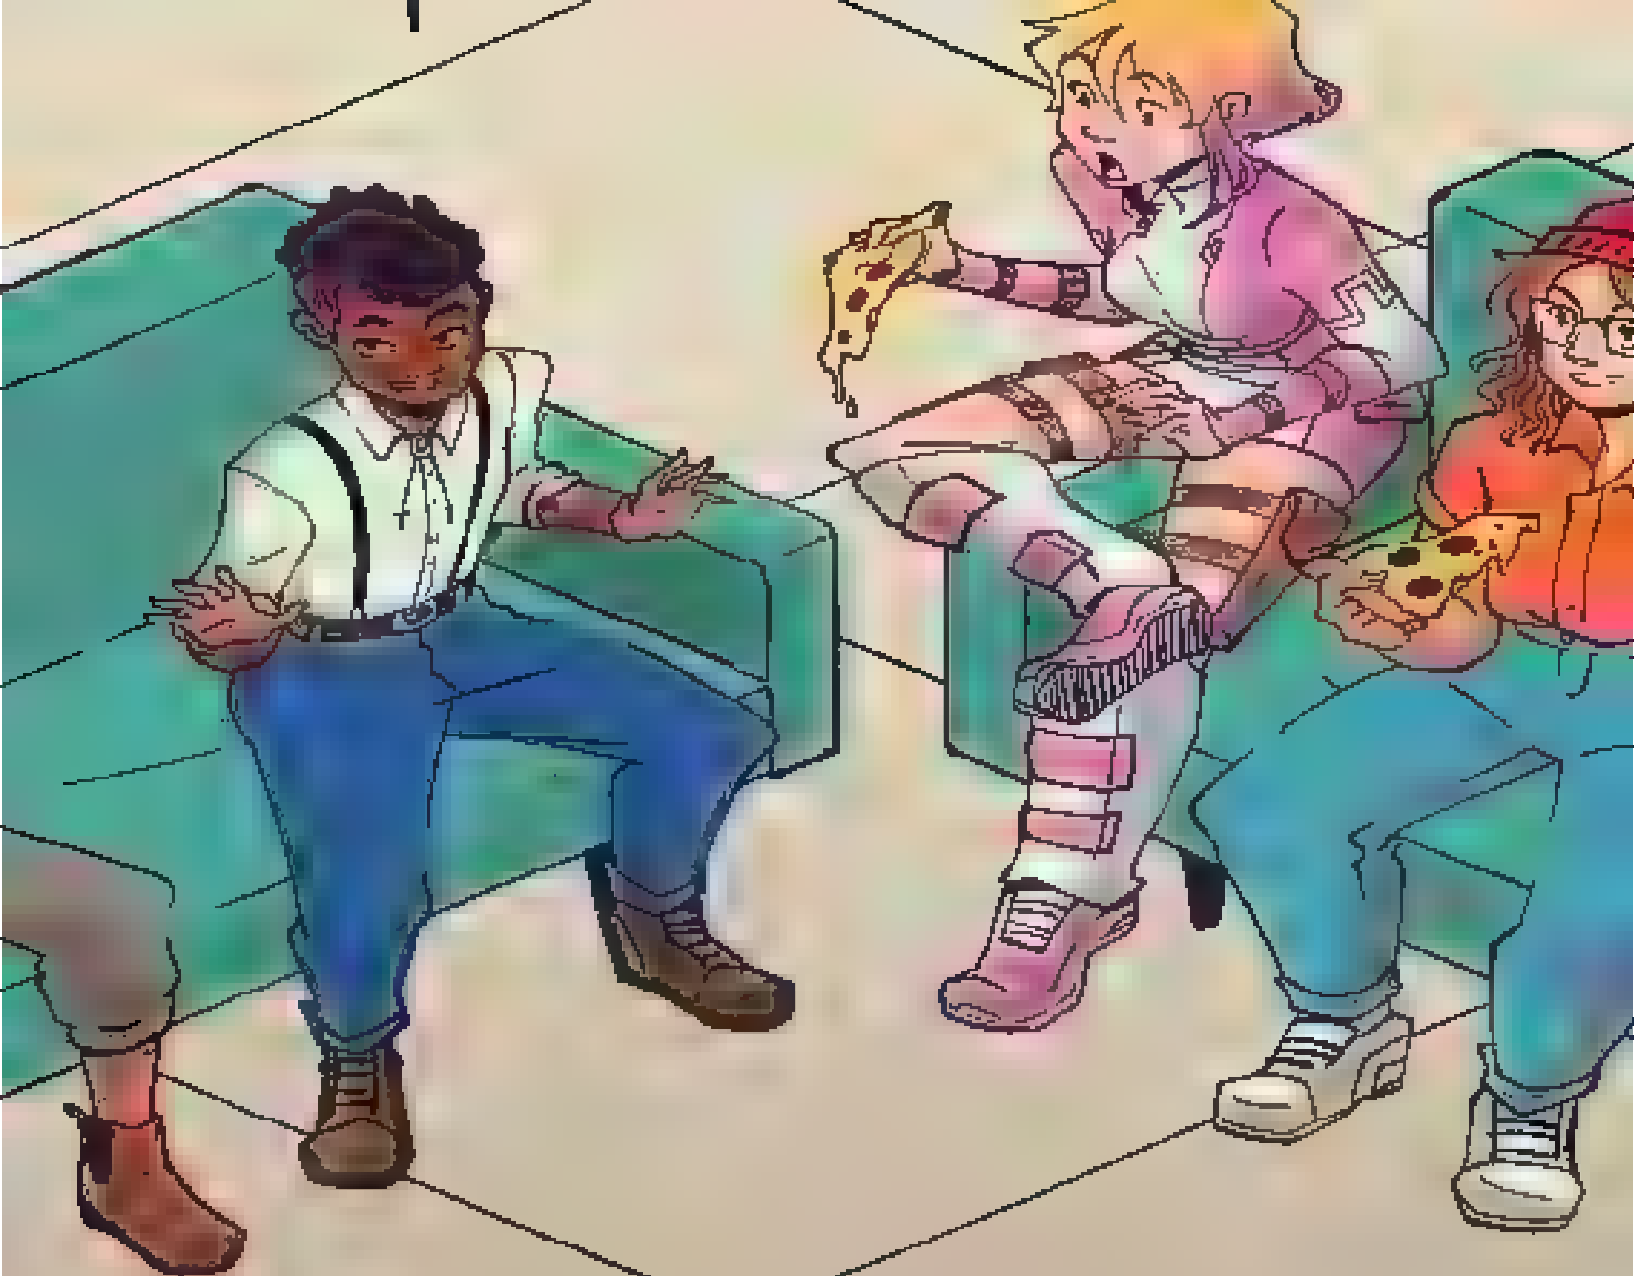

And I'm rooting
for you! You'll find the right girl...or boy, or nonbinary hottie.
I kinda hope it's a girl, but you do you!

Okay, tell me if this rings a bell--I grew up loving forbidden romances.
Like, anything where they definitely can't be together.

Oh my gosh!
I totally tried to date a guy because he had a super-power where he couldn't touch me!

Ha!
That's a classic.

Good to meet you. I'm Rory. I'm gray
ace.

Hey,
everybody, bonus
panel for your avatar!

It's
your girl
Gwenpool!
